Man★: Kate! Can I eat with you?

Woman☆: Oh. Hi, Tomohiro. Sure. Sit down.

Man★: Are you ready for the presentation in Japanese class today?

Woman☆: Yes, I am. Did you write your English report?

Man★: Yes. I finished it this morning. I didn't sleep last night.

Woman☆: You must be tired. Did you have the special paper for the report?

Man★: Yes, I did. I almost forgot about the paper. I ran to the convenience store near my house to buy it at about 10 at night.

Woman☆: You were lucky that there was a convenience store. They are open all night. By the way, what do you think of convenience stores? Convenience stores are really useful. But I think they bring many problems.

Man★: Really? I think they are great. We can buy things that we need at any time of day. Also, dark streets at night are dangerous for women and children. The lights from convenience stores make streets safer for people. They are necessary for our lives.

Woman☆: That's true, but I think keeping stores open all night wastes a lot of energy. The lights must be kept on and the air conditioners must be used without stopping all day long every day. Also, late at night, many young people like to meet their friends at convenience stores. They should be at home to study or sleep. But they often stay outside to eat, drink and talk. This is a problem for people living around the stores.

Man★: I understand what you are saying, but I am still happy that we have convenience stores. I know that there are problems with them, but I feel the good points are greater than the bad points. Oh! We have to hurry. Class is going to start in ten minutes.

Woman☆: Yeah.
